Meet Smokey Da Lamb - who lives in an apartment and takes city walks after being adopted by couple

The lovely little lamb has swapped the farmyard for the city after being adopted and saved from certain death by New York couple.

New Yorkers have been given a timely reminder that Spring has finally sprung - in the form of a super-cute city-dwelling lamb.

Smokey Da Lamb is turning heads in some of the city's coolest neighborhoods after chef Sandy Dee Hall and his girlfriend Maxine Cher adopted him.

Smokey was born in Violet Hill Farm near New York but was abandoned by his mother and would have likely died in the cold. People in the city love Smokey. They always stroke him and take pictures with him - he's so popular.
